

How to Address Your Weaknesses in an Interview

There are many ways to address the question about your weakness. One of the most common ways has always been to turn a negative into a positive. Many candidates try the same song and dance. In fact, this approach may actually make the interviewer think you are hiding something.

A Good Weakness Has Two Important Parts:

Part 1: Your weakness. Briefly describe a real weakness that wouldn't be a major handicap on the job.

Part 2: How you are already working on it. This step is the critical component. Discuss your proactive efforts to improve. This shows that you are self-aware, have a drive to be your best and that the weakness will not slow you down.

How to Choose a “Good” Weakness

Be authentic - Don't select a weakness just because it sounds good. You will make a better impression with sincerity. That doesn't mean you have to share a weakness that makes you look bad.

Pick a weakness that is acceptable for the job at hand - Be aware of the job requirements and don't cite a weakness related to any of the required skills or desired qualities.

Select a weakness that is relatively minor and “fixable” - The weakness is something you can improve through work and motivation.

Fixable: “I get nervous when speaking in front of large groups.” You can get better through practice and learning new skills — and this is a common development area).

Harder to fix: “I am very shy and often have trouble speaking up in meetings.” While there's nothing wrong with being shy, an interviewer could assume that the candidate would have trouble collaborating in a team environment. This is a preference or personality quality that would be more difficult to change.

Demonstrate That You Are Working on Your Weakness

In the second part of your answer, you need to describe how you have already taken steps to improve in your area of weakness. A great candidate is always looking for ways to learn and grow and a fabulous candidate then takes the initiative to improve. Use your answer to demonstrate your motivation to be the best at what you do.

Connect with your COIII to learn more about the Second Chance Centers. Upon release email dersreentry@azdes.gov to connect with an employment specialist. You can also Schedule a Virtual Appointment to meet with an employment specialist from our DES website <https://des.az.gov/services/employment/job-seekers>