Substantial Functional Limitations

In addition to being diagnosed with at least one developmental disability, the person must show “substantial functional limitations” due to their qualifying diagnosis in three (3) of the following life functions. The age of the person is considered when identifying substantial functional limitations.

RECEPTIVE AND EXPRESSIVE LANGUAGE	Can't communicate with others, or can't communicate effectively without the help of a third person, a person with special skills, or without a mechanical device.
LEARNING	Cognitive factors keep the person from participating in age-appropriate learning activities without help.
SELF-DIRECTION	Needs help with personal finances, protecting self-interest or making independent decisions which may affect the person's well-being.
SELF-CARE	Needs significant help with eating, hygiene, grooming or taking care of his or herself or when the time required for the person to do these things is so great that the person can't keep employment or take care of other activities of daily living.
MOBILITY	Fine or gross motor skills are impaired so another person or mechanical device is needed to help the person move from place to place or when the time required for the person to do this on his or her own is so great that the person can't keep employment and take care of other activities of daily living.
CAPACITY FOR INDEPENDENT LIVING	To keep the person safe and well he or she needs supervision daily to take care of health care and housekeeping.
ECONOMIC SELF-SUFFICIENCY	Can't perform tasks needed to be employed or the person is limited in what they can earn to the extent that his or her annual income, after considering extraordinary expenses the person has because of the disability, is below the federal poverty level.

Examples of documentation of substantial functional limitations are:

- ▶ Medical records such as psychological, psychiatric, neurological and primary care physician (PCP)
- ▶ Results of accepted standardized tests
- ▶ Results of the Inventory for Client and Agency Planning (ICAP)
- ▶ Information in an Individual Education Program (IEP) or Individual Support Plan (ISP)
